

National Healthcare Facilities and Engineering week

By Mike Jager, Facilities Manager

October 23-29 is National Healthcare Facilities and Engineering week. This week also celebrates National Mother-in-law day, National Talk Show host day, National Bologna day, National Greasy Food day, National Mule day, National American Beer day, National Frankenstein Friday, National Breadstick day and National Hermit day. These are just the highlights. What does all this mean? There is a celebration for just about everything you can think of, but I am glad to acknowledge the guys on my staff who maintain all the functions of our hospital district's facilities. From plumbing and electrical to grounds and snow removal to remodeling and security to list just a few. Our maintenance engineers are on call 24/7 to handle any situation that comes up. From being certified in CPR to jumping a clinic patient's car in the parking lot to conducting required monthly checks throughout the hospital. Our work is literally never done. I appreciate the dedication they have and the sacrifice they are willing to make to make sure everything is safe and functioning properly. So I say thank you Coley Helms and Wade Culp! I will bring bologna, breadsticks and (root) beer dressed as Frankenstein riding a hermit mule with your mother-in-law. Just make sure you know who is who!
